Who Gets to Belong? Larry Shue's Farcical Foreigner Comes to Harlequin

Olympia, WA – February 10, 2026 – Harlequin Productions presents The Foreigner by Larry Shue, March 6 – 29, 2026 at the State Theater in downtown Olympia. Producing Artistic Director Aaron Lamb will direct.

Larry Shue's The Foreigner proves how easily secrets and prejudices can tip a friendly gathering into something far more dangerous. When a shy Englishman lands at a rustic Georgia lodge, his fear of small talk inspires a harmless fib: he doesn't speak English. When overheard asides set off chaos, Charlie's accidental silence becomes a mirror: what might we learn if we actually listened? In the spirit of screwball mayhem meets rustic intrigue, each new confession detonates laugh out loud chaos. Quiet no more—Charlie's about to speak volumes.

Director Aaron Lamb notes that while The Foreigner was written as a farce in 1983, its themes resonate strongly today. "We're living in a time when we've weaponized the idea of the foreigner," Lamb says. "A 'foreigner' isn't just someone from another land; it's anyone we've decided isn't us." Though Shue's comedy was not written as a political statement, Lamb observes that it 'rhymes' with the present moment. Comedy, he suggests, can hold truths that lectures cannot, inviting audiences to laugh while quietly recognizing themselves in those onstage.

Lamb approaches the production as a period piece. By setting the play firmly in its time, he hopes to create space for audiences to observe how each character's reaction to what feels unfamiliar differs - or doesn't - from today's instinct to quickly accept or reject what we encounter. He explains, "Betty is curious. Ellard is eager. Owen and David are afraid. My central question is this: if we can recognize that our reflexive reactions more closely resemble David and Owen's fear, is there opportunity for us to make more room for the curiosity and grace we see in the other two characters?"
